Prerequisites	No prerequisites are designated but those who have taken an introductory course in linguistics are expected to be familiar with some basic concepts.
Course Objectives	The primary goal of this course is to achieve basic understandings about the two interrelated subareas of the study of human speech sounds, focusing on the sounds used in English. (1) phonetics, concerned with physical principles of how speech sounds are produced, transmitted, and perceived (2) phonology, concerned with how speech sounds are organized in the grammatical system of a particular language
Course Description	The course is designed along with the following class requirements.
	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>1. Absorbing important concepts given in the required textbook with guidance of lecture notes distributed by the instructor</li> <li>2. Having some hands-on experience with computer-based speech analysis through assignments</li> <li>3. Internalizing your knowledge through exams</li> </ol> The course is targeted for English learners as a second language. We'll frequently compare and discuss sounds of other languages (e.g., Korean), in order to obtain knowledge about cross-linguistic similarities and differences and use that knowledge for practical purposes. For example, by the end of the semester, you'll be able to understand physical relationships between articulatory movements and acoustic properties of different speech sounds, and thus be able to use this knowledge for improving your pronunciation and recognition (though this course is not aimed at improving pronunciation). * Students with disabilities can negotiate with the Disabled Student's Academic Support Center regarding course materials and assignments.
