Target Students	This course is open to undergraduates majoring in political science or international studies.

Course Description & Goals	There are three main objectives in this course. First, we will examine how to prepare a theoretical basis to analyze East Asian international relations from the 19th century to the advent of the Cold War and we will pay special attention to how Korea encountered changes and vicissitudes of fortune as it chartered its own course in the world. Second, we will identify factors which stabilized and disrupted the East Asian international order and how interactions between such factors affected Korea's responses. Finally, we will consider, in light of the history covered in this course, what the future of East Asia's international order will look like and how Korea's diplomacy should act as a pivot between East Asia and the United States.

Syllabus in English	This course will address the history of East Asia's international relations and East Asia's diplomacy towards the United States and the world at large from the 19th century to the advent of the Cold War. More specifically, this course will be devoted to answering the question, "How did Korea charter her own path towards establishing a modern conception of national sovereignty throughout the long 19th and 20th centuries?" We will address topics such as a comparison between a Confucian tributary system and a Westphalian system, Japan's modernization and competing Chinese and Korean responses, Japanese

imperialism and the coming of the First and Second World Wars, Japan's surrender to the Allies and lingering post-colonial questions such as territorial sovereignty over Dokdo, the Korean War and the first two Indochina Wars as the opening "hot wars" of the Cold War, and finally, the future of the Northeast Asian international order after the Cold War.
