Food and Water Security

In this course you examine a range of approaches towards food and water security, from international policy agreements to community-based activities.

Course description

CurriculumApply now

sessions are alternated with debates, group work and a field visit. Students will benefit from discussions with their peers from different disciplinary backgrounds and countries of origin. At least five of the following topics will be covered:

- Drivers of food and water security
- Food systems and transdisciplinary research
- Water management in flood-prone areas and water-scarce areas
- Food (and water) prices and food economics
- Innovative interventions to feed the world more sustainably

We bring practice to the classroom by using real-life examples from the Netherlands and from projects in Africa and Southeast Asia. Assessment is based on student participation and the preparation of a digital poster (1 per group), based on peer-reviewed scientific journals supported by other, non-academic, yet societal relevant articles, to be presented during class (by means of an oral group presentation).
